SAP ERP Integration Overview with Other Systems

So far in the first three chapters of this book, we have studied an overview of SAP business suite applications and the NetWeaver Application Server ABAP and Java technology foundation that it runs on. In this chapter we will study the central role the SAP ERP system has in an organization and its network integration into the organization's enterprise infrastructure, as well as to the external systems outside the organization and the SAP support infrastructure. This chapter covers various communication and integration technologies that "bind" different SAP ABAP and Java-based applications, along with the third-party enterprise solutions, external vendors, and SAP support organization into an enterprise-wide SAP solution adding value and driving the business needs of an organization. This chapter is also intended to give an overview to enterprise architects as to how a SAP solution would fit into an enterprise-wide architecture.

Figure 4-1 illustrates the integration scenarios that could come into play with the implementation and operations of a SAP ERP system for a hypothetical SAP customer. The remaining sections of this chapter will use this hypothetical scenario to explain the common integration scenario groupings and the underlying communication protocol and standards used by SAP.

Basic Communication in SAP Business Solutions

SAP business applications use the following protocols and standards for communication and data transfer between different systems. One of the following basic network and communication standards is at the heart of the different integration scenarios with the SAP ERP systems. Let us look into the details of each of the following protocols and standards.

TCP/IP

In SAP business applications, network communication is with the Transmission Control Protocol/Internet Protocol (TCP/IP) standards. During the system build phase, the required IP address is assigned to the host and necessary configuration is performed where a particular SAP business solution is planned to be installed.
